The F-111 Aardvark & F-14 Tomcat By Greg Goebel

In the 1960s, the US Air Force initiated a program to develop an advanced strike aircraft, which emerged as the General Dynamics "F-111". After a troublesome development process, the F-111 became an impressive combat asset, providing excellent service to both the US and Australian air forces.

Early on, the F-111 program also involved parallel development of a carrier-based interceptor for the US Navy, the "F-111B". The F-111B proved a non-starter and was canceled -- with the Navy then moving to development of a new-design aircraft better suited to the service's needs, which would emerge as the Grumman "F-14 Tomcat". The Tomcat provided the backbone of fleet air defense, and was also pressed into the reconnaissance and, as the "Bombrat", strike roles. This document provides a history and description of the F-111 and F-14.
